Lisa Surbaugh – a 20-year West Virginia educator known only as "Lisa" – taught at Leonard Elementary School in the small rural town of Kenova, WV, where she allegedly wrote the false reports for at least 13 of her students, whose ages ranged from 13 to 15. Surbaugh actually doesn't even work as a teacher at the school and was fired last week, according to local outlet The Charleston Daily Mail. Surbaugh was accused of falsifying the reports to help the teens get into the prestigious, private Huntington Prep School in West Virginia, the second-highest-ranked prep school in the country according to US News & World Report, where Surbaugh enrolled her students as a non-matriculated student. Huntington Prep, an all-boys school, requires students to apply to attend and is considered an elite institution with a high-ranked academics and athletics program. "Lisa's actions are in clear violation of our policy regarding the use of school resources and for endangering the well-being of her students," said Mark Cupp, Superintendent of the Kanawha County Schools district. The scandal, which only came to light after Huntington Prep administrators found the falsified pregnancy reports, unfolded over at least a year and a half. Law enforcement launched an investigation in September 2015 and revealed that the false reports were sent from Surbaugh's home computer, according to a report. "I was in shock. I didn't even know what to do," said one of the victims, a female student who asked to remain anonymous, as she described the moment she received the report in question to NBC News. The false pregnancy report, which was placed in the girl's homeroom and signed "Lisa M." was dated September 0cc13bf012
