Cereal top four worldwide in energy and nutrient supply March 26, 2014 The UN Food and Agriculture Organization has released a set of results from a new study of global cereal top commodities. The study highlights four cereal top four worldwide in energy and nutrient supply. These include wheat, rice, maize, and soybeans. These top four also contribute 57 per cent of the global total cereal supply. Cohen said the UN FAO is using the “bread basket” concept of the region as defined by the World Bank as a framework for the data and they are working together with the FAO to assess how this region works to sustain and grow its cereal top four. In addition, over the last ten years there has been a strong trend toward reductions in the amount of cereal top four that each country consumes. However, from 2010 to 2012, there has been a net increase in the amount of cereal top four consumption each year. Determination of formaldehyde in house dust by isotope dilution mass spectrometry.
