Using the familiar on/off circle, you can select pixels, shapes, colors, and most other parts of the picture to manipulate. A number of icons (wizards) are built into the program for various tasks. You can see a list of the icons on the right side of the canvas, as shown in Figure 6-2. If an icon looks new to you, hover the mouse over it to see a tooltip that explains what it does. In this book, we describe each icon in detail. Figure 6-2: The toolbox contains icons and tools. The left side of the canvas displays the icons. One of the biggest challenges for patients with chronic conditions is the management of flare-ups or exacerbations. Most health systems have implemented some kind of patient education, but there are few controlled studies to support that. Infertility and pregnancy are both associated with immune cell activation. It is now known that the immune system has evolved to properly respond during pregnancy and to limit deleterious responses that can have long-term deleterious effects for the offspring. It is also known that the immunological response of the mother is distinct from that of the fetus and parturient woman. Importantly, maternal responses have evolved to ensure optimal fetal survival and birth. The immune system of parturients under normal conditions does not generate deleterious responses, but excessive activation of the immune system leads to preterm delivery. Characterization of the mother's immune state at different stages of pregnancy and the characterization of the pregnancy-related immune changes during the time of delivery and during the immediate period following delivery has led to new findings that are potentially significant for improved management of pregnancies with high-risk pregnancies, including superimposed pathologies like infection, overaggressive T-helper type 2 responses, and allogeneic pregnancy. These include characterization of innate immune responses and characterization of cellular and molecular components of pregnancy-related immune responses and the correlation of such factors with clinical outcome.
