Things are moving fast in the life of 49ers wideout Michael Crabtree, who is today's focus of a Nike commercial with Kobe Bryant and LeBron James. In this spot with the famous ad trio, Crabtree runs on the field with Bryant as if they were playing against each other, only Bryant is ahead with the ball on the full court, keeping Crabtree on his toes. Crabtree's good at keeping up, even with James on his tail. But he's so small, Crabtree basically shimmies along the ground just a little to stay in stride with Bryant, who can outjump him by about two feet without even breaking a sweat. OK, Crabtree's not that small, but he's barely 6'1", and Bryant, James and Crabtree play basketball at the same size. Still, it's a fun spot, and it gives some insight into Crabtree's playing style. When we saw Crabtree in San Francisco last year, he was developing a reputation as a special teams' ace. As a punt returner, Crabtree showed good ability to move up and down the field against the best coverage teams in the NFL. And as a kick returner, he showed good balance and agility in addition to solid vision and speed. Still, the reputation only goes so far. Crabtree is just one part of the return game, and while he had a few big plays, it was still largely a role limited to setting the edge on punt coverage and returning all kicks for touchbacks. Even with his athleticism and natural athletic gifts, a player who can

Marital status of parent and alcohol use among adolescents in a Nigerian urban community.

This study examined the association of alcohol use and marital status of parents with school performance among secondary school students of three schools in Lagos, Nigeria. Three questionnaires were administered to 213 students (M age = 13.7 yr.) to obtain data on demographic characteristics, alcohol consumption, parents' marital status, and school performance. Univariate and multiple regression analyses were conducted to assess for significant associations of alcohol use and marital status with school performance. Results indicated that more than one-fourth of the students (25.9%) had friends who drink alcohol, about half (50.0%) of the students had tasted alcohol and 23.6% of the students ever drank alcohol. Of the respondents, 27.2% of the fathers and 19.3% of the mothers were married, whereas 18.6% of the fathers and 10.2% of the mothers were living with a partner. There was a significant association (p [A case of successful bilateral retrograde femorotibial bypass].
