In the future, I .Q: How to make a has_many relationship require the existence of the associated records? I am converting some existing code from one database to Rails 3, and I need to make some changes to the model. One of the models has a has_many, and I need to be able to filter this list of objects by the value of a field in the join table. How can I make this have a required_by_field? ActiveRecord::Base.class_eval do def required_by_field(*fields) fields.each do |field| belongs_to :role, :class_name => "User", :foreign_key => "recipient_id", :required => field end end -- class MyObject "User" end class User "User", :foreign_key => "recipient_id", :required => :role_exists? end -- class User "recipient_id" def role_exists? return false if!self.recipient_roles.empty? true end end This assumes that you have Role#recipient_id as the relationship name in the join model. If you want to make sure that the association is always loaded as an object, you should modify the role_exists? method to fetch the association as well. CNN's Alisyn Camerota said Wednesday that the school shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Park
