are you a fan of working in a collaborative environment, but hate the cost of purchasing and maintaining your own server? maybe you are looking to offer your services to others who would benefit from your ability to access their files and work on them in your office. perhaps you are looking to offer a business solution, and are looking for a low-cost solution? then microsoft small business server might be the answer for you. continue reading to learn more about this exciting new business offering from microsoft. windows home server 2011 update rollup 2 is the latest in a series of updates that will provide sbs 2011 administrators with more control over the services and features that are available on their servers. this update also includes several fixes and enhancements that are included in this release. i was just wondering if anyone else was planning to use whs 2011 in a home/office server environment. i have been using whs for the last 2 or 3 years and it works great for me, but i am wondering if my use case is unusual? i am considering using whs 2011 for a home/office server primarily to stream media content via upnp to my xbox 360, wii, pc, apple tv and ps3. i currently use various media servers and media players for each of these platforms, but i find the networking/proxy setup and management to be more trouble than its worth. i am also a media junkie, so i am not shy about adding content to my servers, which i can then access from any device. i recently did a server recovery on my whs v1 machine. the recovery performed fine but i discovered that the windows update function no longer works. in fact i now realize it was turned off some months ago. i know whs is no longer supported by microsoft. however, i did expect that by doing a recovery i would be able to download existing updates to get me back to the version state that i had prior to the recovery. specifically, the restore stopped at power pack 2 and so i have lost the functionality i had with power pack 3. is there a way to access pp3 and other microsoft whs v1 updates while the os is no longer supported, it was providing great value for me as a behind the router/firewall home server.
